

Grow Your Business by Growing for Clarkson

Identity-preserved grains and oilseeds provide more earnings per acre than commodities.

That's why Clarkson links farms to specialty markets that pay premiums for selected corns and soybeans. Clarkson contracts with farmers to provide non-GMO, certified transition, organic and conventional crops that are segregated by hybrid and variety. Throughout the Midwest, we gather these specialty crops and ship them to our customers worldwide. From farm to consumer, our unique supply line provides healthy, great-tasting tortillas, tortilla chips, cereals, flours, masa, soy milk, tofu, miso and more.

Identity-Preserved, Traced to the Farm

With our identity preservation program, end users of our crops can trace their supply line to visit the farms where their ingredients were grown. Food processors, and occasionally consumers, want to identify and shake hands with the farmer who grew their food. Plus, our farmers take pride in knowing the exact consumer products that were produced from their efforts – nutritional foods that are enjoyed by families all over the world.

Our Business Model: Simple, Transparent, Profitable and Trusted

Clarkson contracts with qualified, preferred growers to produce, store, condition and deliver select varieties of corn and soybeans to satisfy our customers' unique specifications. A qualified Clarkson grower has the right infrastructure; a preferred Clarkson grower has a positive attitude. Together, we are a team dedicated to delivering consistent, high-quality products that consumers prefer. Regulated by state agricultural agencies, Clarkson offers straight-forward production contracts that keep us working together for years.
